History:	In September 1968, the Indian Affairs Branch of Canada within the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (DIAND), ceased to exist as a result of a major reorganization. In its place the Indian and Eskimo Affairs Program emerged including elements from both the former Indian Affairs and Northern Administration branches. This new structure was based on function rather than on geographic location or ethnic origin. The Program included the areas within the Department responsible for administration of; education, social, cultural, community and economic development as well as statutory commitments. After 1978

the Program became known as the Indian and Inuit Affairs Program (IIAP).

Administrative history, from the finding aid for the Indian and Inuit Affairs Program sous-fonds, which is part of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development fonds Library and Archives Canada.

Scope and Content: The fonds contain materials relating to the Indian and Eskimo Affairs Program through the mid 1970s.
