Administrative History:

Fred Drake was characterized by his energy, wit, humour, courage and integrity. His academic career was distinguished by his love of research. Although this research carried him throughout the world he never strayed too far from his roots in the shipbuilding town of Barrow-in-Furness in Lancashire, England as his research often included ships and the sea.

Drake's education as a Historian began at the University of Manchester in London, England where he received his BA and later an MA. After completing this preliminary education Drake was employed at the University College in London and then at the University of the West Indies in Jamaica each lasting a year. Upon completion of his short employment Drake returned to school to receive his PhD from Cornell University in the United States of America. Upon completion of his PhD Drake went back overseas to teach at University College of Aberystwyth in Wales. Then in 1970 Drake came back to North America and began teaching at Brock University.

While at Brock Drake became a significant part of University life. He became chair of the history department and the University Senate as well as a member of the Board of Trustees. He was well liked by both faculty and as his dedication, energy and humour kept spirits elevated. Drake also contributed to the academic community while at Brock University through his research and publications, some of which included;

- * The Empire Of The Seas : A Biography Of Rear Admiral Robert Wilson Shufeldt, USN
- * A collection of documents on The War of 1812 in the Niagara Peninsula (1981),
- * 10 scholarly articles; including an early re-examination of witchcraft in colonial America in the American Quarterly [1968] and Ottawa River Canals and the Defense of British North America in Canadian Historical Review
- * More than 80 encyclopedia articles

- * Numerous book reviews
- * Frequent conference papers and lectures
- * Service on many conference panels.
- * Two lengthy manuscripts—one on naval operations in the War of 1812, the second on the Lake and Rivers War in the same conflict—awaited editing at the time of his death.

Shortly after his retirement from teaching at Brock University at age 65, Drake passed away. On June 18, 2002, Drake lost his battle with myelodysplasia, a blood disorder related to cancer of the bone marrow on June 18, 2002. Although a difficult disease to cope with Drake handled it as he handled most things in his life, with courage, and a positive outlook.

Scope and Content: Materials related to military operations of the 1812-era, research of the late Dr. Frederick C. Drake, of the History Department at Brock University. Original folder titles, pertaining to an institutions call numbers, were retained and appear in parenthesis after the given folder title. The folders were placed into the Series and/or Sub-series which coincided with its original title. Folder titles contain the title of the material as well as the institution from which it derived in order for proper accreditation to be given, before materials are used and/or cited in a publication. Folders titled “Individual or Family Papers” contain numerous different collections of letters from the Institution marked on the folder. When the bulk of the materials belong to one collection it is noted in the finding aid. All publications which the University did not hold were placed in series IV. If the University had access to the publications they were removed from the collection and noted in the separated materials category with their call numbers. The second manuscript The War for the Inland Seas: The Naval War of 1812 on the Great Lakes and the St. Lawrence River was incomplete when Dr. Drake passed away. His widow, Valerie Drake cleaned up the manuscript before donating it to Brock. The current manuscript reflects both Dr. and Mrs. Drake’s work.
